Applicants who are ABD and are close to completion will also be considered, but the Ph.D. should be earned prior to employment.

The area of specialization is open. The position includes teaching in face-to-face and online formats. Candidates are expected to (1) work positively with faculty, staff, students, and the community, (2) teach across all academic programs, (3) conduct and disseminate scholarly research, (4) mentor undergraduate and graduate students, and (5) serve the department, the university, and the community.

About Criminal Justice at UA Little Rock

Created in 1972, the Department of Criminal Justice at UA Little Rock is the flagship criminal justice program in the state. Our mission is to create engaged life-long learners dedicated to improving justice in society. We offer a wide array of educational opportunities to meet all academic levels, including associate, bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees. Our academic programs prepare students for work in law enforcement, corrections, and juvenile and adult justice agencies, as well as high level research and academic positions. The department is also involved in several grants and contracts. The department has been widely recognized as one of the top online colleges in Criminal Justice for undergraduates and masters students. For more information about the department, please visit <http://ualr.edu/criminaljustice>.

The Department of Criminal Justice is housed in the College of Social Sciences and Communication (CSSC), a community of teacher-scholars whose mission is to apply theory and research to drive social change and inspire human expression, reflection, and interconnection. (see <https://ualr.edu/cssc/>). The College is committed to interdisciplinary research and community development.

UA Little Rock offers high quality education as one of the South's leading research, engaged universities with one-of-a-kind connections in Arkansas's thriving capital city. Situated in the heart of Little Rock, UA Little Rock is a metropolitan university that offers a dynamic learning environment where students immerse themselves in the traditional college experience and take advantage of opportunities in both the public and private sectors. The Trojan community is diverse, with nearly 11,000 students from all over the world.
